

DARK DEADLY DOOM DREADED

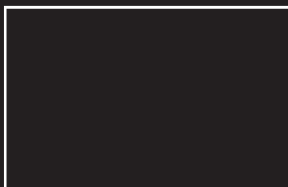

All at Standstill - No Looting During Blackout

BY MIZRI DARKMAN

EGYPT- Except for the Goshen area, a major worsening blackout is being felt heavily throughout the nation.

Despite repeated warnings over the last three weeks that a blackout may paralyze the region, the Government refused to negotiate with the Power Authority.

Although strangers were able to enter homes and trespass at will, no thefts were reported, despite the lack of police protection. There was, however, a drastic rise in unreported deaths, as 80% of the Jewish community remains in the dark about the Exodus.

On the Bright Side

BY ORLY ISRAEL

Violence and gore sell newspapers, which is why the media thrives on bad news, headlines screaming crime, oppression, drownings, death, darkness and all kinds of plagues.

Blackouts usually confirm our darkest fears. Mobs riot, rob and plunder stores and homes. How remarkable that the crime rate went down, not up, during this blackout.

In light of the above, it's nice to report some-thing good for a change. Yes! There is a bright side to the current darkness!

There are those who behaved in a most exemplary manner, sanctifying G-d's Name. Not taking advantage of people in distress, they reflect Israel's enlightenment, "A mitzva is a candle, and Torah is light."

May we see the light at the end of the tunnel of this long Galut night. If only these shining events would allow more of our brethren to see the light. As darkness covers the nations, Israel's shining light pierces the black of the night.

BOOK REVIEW:

The Bnai Brak Haggadah

Everyone is talking about the historic Bnai Brak Haggadah that predates the famous Amsterdam, Venice or Frankfurt Haggadah masterpieces in prestigious museums and private collections.

This Bnai Brak Haggadah is so rare that there is no actual copy extant of this unusual work.

Exotic Haggadahs are known for their beautiful gold leaf, woodcuts & engravings, intricate designs and colorful margins resplendent with chirping birds and blossoming flowers, created with great talent and painstaking detail.

Disclaimer: The Bnai Brak Haggadah has no superficial decorations or external embellishments. Rather than fancy calligraphy on expensive vellum, it is rich with original commentary studded with priceless treasure of Torah gems.

In this Haggadah the Sages draw on their distinctive styles, an art to itself.

This is not your simple layman's Haggadah. At first glance, it consists of only one or two paragraphs. But the full and unabridged transcript of this Haggadah could fill many volumes, enough reading for an all nighter.

Practically speaking, it is not recommended for most of us at the Seder, our stomachs grumbling and looking forward to end the reading and begin the eating.

A marvel of stamina and persistence, this Haggadah is no comfortable bedtime reading to fall asleep. On the contrary. Reverberating with intense Halachic dispute and debate, the friction of brilliant Talmudic crossfire illuminates the night, it keeps the reader awake to the end, concluding with a shining example of inter-generational study by the authors' disciples.

To paraphrase the NYT Sunday edition: "You don't have to read it all, but it's good to know it's all there."

Hear O Rabbis!

With all due respect to our distinguished masters, we respectfully urge you not to overlook our daily responsibilities even when totally absorbed in Torah.

We do not mean to interrupt our great masters, or detract from their holy work. Indeed we represent the continuity of our revered masters' message and mission.

Our faith in the Redemption helps us see the breaking of dawn after the long dark night of exile, speedily in our days.

Sincerely,
Concerned Students Committee
